Energy for Water: It is of the utmost urgency...

For several weeks the barrel of oil has exceeded 100 dollars on the international market. This sudden rise in the price of crude oil, especially in poor and isolated countries, is depriving a portion of the world's population access to this resource.

Energy is indispensable for water: without energy, and in particular, without electricity, there can be no pumping, no storage and no treatment. Take, for example, the populations of Benin or Mali, who, due to the increase in the price of gas-oil required for the pumping centre, had to reduce the amount of time for pumping water from 8 to 4 hours a day.

This basic need for human development, to which we must bring concrete and adapted solutions, is a matter of utmost urgency.

First of all, by inventing new technological solutions involving alternative forms of energy, and by using less energy, we will be able to have greater access to water in the near future.

But this isn't enough... We must, first and foremost, see to it that part of the energy which is necessary for the access to water be sold at a reduced price for those who are most in need.

To do this, might we imagine a certain form of moratorium be placed on price increases? This solution would neutralise part of the current price, recent price increases, or an upcoming price increase.

Might we also contemplate access to a "water-fuel?" This mixture, a form of diesel oil, is similar to that which existed, or which still exists, in several European countries, to the benefits of farmers, fishermen and taxi-drivers.

Finally, why not reflect on establishing a specific tax on petroleum products? This would result in the possibility of creating a fund dedicated to water, to be discussed with oil producing countries.

The World Water Council is working on responding to these questions. Thank you for joining in this reflection.

6th World Water Forum

Host the 6th World Water Forum!

Does your country wish to host the next World Water Forum in March 2012? Express your interest now! The bidding process was launched this month by the WWC.

For the next edition of the World Water Forum, the Government of any country, in collaboration with a city, is invited to demonstrate its capacity to organise such an important event. In order to be considered for the next steps in the bidding procedure, a preliminary expression of interest should be received by the WWC Headquarters in Marseille by 1 June 2008 and must be presented or endorsed by a representative of the central Government of the country concerned, at the highest possible level.

The Forum is not just an international conference. It is a three-year process involving a great deal of preparatory work on specific subjects, taking into account the perspectives of multiple stakeholders from different regions. The thematic and regional preparatory processes help to propose concrete solutions to the main water-related challenges that the world faces today.

The full announcement is available on the Council's website: www.worldwatercouncil.org. For further information on the 6th Forum, contact Danielle Gaillard, Forum Coordinator.

1st African Water Week in Tunis

With Tunisia's Minister of Agriculture and Water Resources, the President of the African Development Bank and the Prince of Orange at his side, Loïc Fauchon opened the First African Water Week, which was held 25-29 March. This important event was organised on the initiative of AMCOW (African Ministers' Water Council) in the framework of preparing for the next Summit of the African Union. This was an occasion for the President of the World Water Council to speak with numerous political personalities from the region, such as Tunisia's Prime Minister, the Minister of Defence, as well as the Minister of Environment, and to plead the cause of water before a number of journalists who were present. Access Mr Fauchon's opening speech on the WWC website: <http://www.worldwatercouncil.org/index.php?id=890>.

The advancements in preparation of the 5th World Water Forum were presented during a plenary session, and insisted on the necessity of increasing African participation. The WWC also co-organised two side-events with the AfDB to present the framework for a new platform for Water for Development, launched in partnership with several African Council members.

Meeting the "Banker to the Poor"

On 31 March in Paris, upon invitation from WWC member Veolia Water, Loïc Fauchon met with Muhammed Yunus, Nobel Prize Winner in 2006 and the pioneer of micro-credits. The discussion focused on the preparation of the 5th World Water Forum within the framework the theme, 'Financing' as well as a potential partnership for water. Mr. Yunus also met with Nicolas Sarkozy at the Presidential Palace to advocate the development of microfinancing and to highlight the commitments made by the planet's wealthiest countries to increase their aid to Africa.

Partnership MEEDDAT-WWC

In partnership with the Minister of Ecology, Energy, Sustainable Development and Land, the World Water Council signed an agreement this week, which aims to: 1.) contribute to the establishment of a worldwide mechanism for the observation of water, which will assure better management of water resources and services and, 2.) to contribute to the reinforcement of the role of local authorities in the politics of access to water and sanitation, taking the lead on the International agenda by organizing and facilitating a constructive dialog between local authorities and central governments. This dialogue is an integral part of the 5th World Water Forum's Political Process.

Dünya Su Günü (World Water Day) 2008: The Istanbul Urban Water Consensus

More than 400 water experts and local elected officials participated in the ceremonies organized for World Water Day in Istanbul, where the WWC was represented by Board member Jerry Delli Priscoli at the opening ceremony. One of the prominent events included the launch of the Istanbul Urban Water Consensus by Mayor Topbas of Istanbul, in the presence of 38 delegations from cities all over the world, including Rotterdam, Sarajevo and Zaragoza. Mayor Topbas launched an appeal to the leaders the world's cities for improved management of their water resources, and for the facilitation of access to water and sanitation for all citizens. The Istanbul Urban Water Consensus consists of a series of commitments to which cities are requested to adhere in order to improve water management. The document has been released as a draft for comments, and after being finalised it will be sent for signing by October 2008. For more information, or to download the Consensus, visit the 5th World Water Forum website: www.worldwaterforum5.org.

In Brief...

The UN Human Rights Council Moves Forward on the Human Right to Water and Sanitation - Governments are bound by human-rights obligations which ensure water and sanitation. This was clearly indicated in a statement made by the UN Human Rights Council in Geneva last week. Germany and Spain were among the 40 co-sponsors who, by a consensus, adopted a new resolution that also established an Independent Expert on Human Rights obligations, related to ensuring access to safe drinking water and sanitation.
